Q: How to make a HTTP based service for Android which is a little bit custom designed I am currently working on an Android project and as part of that, I have to serve dynamic content from server. Now my client is requesting an API which can be used for the following: Download a html page Upload a html page Download any content Upload any content For example, the API should be able to download a html page from server and then display it on the device. So, my question is which should be the best approach for my application's needs? Create my own HTTP server Use one of the available HTTP servers or Should I just write a JAVA web-server and serve the content? I need suggestions on this and pointers to do any of the above. A: If you want to have a RESTful-based web service I can recommend these two libraries: RestTemplate (best HTTP client library as I can't think of anything better than this) Restlet (best RESTful client library as I can't think of anything better than this) You'll need to use one of them to access the API from the Android application (RestTemplate or Restlet can be used from the Java side in case you choose to write your server in Java as well). Rapid diagnosis of lyme disease by a fluorescence polarization assay. A fluorescence polarization assay (FP assay) for a recombinant antigen (rLAg) of B. burgdorferi sensu lato (Bb) is described, and its diagnostic performance is compared with an enzyme immunoassay (EIA). The FP assay was based on a mixture of a fluorescent tracer (Fl-Bb) and a rLAg of Bb. The Tracer-Bb, which was fluorescently labeled, could not be internalized by spirochetes during phagocytosis. After the spirochetes became intracellular, they formed a complex with the Fl-Bb, and the fluorescence emitted by the complex was quantitatively measured. A total of 245 samples were tested by the EIA and the FP assay. In the samples that were positive by the EIA and negative by the FP assay, the Tm for the EIA was 28.2 degrees C (for Borrelia miyamotoi) to 61.1 degrees C
