number was entered. Why is the update manager asking for this info? Answer: This is because it will stop Windows Update from delivering the required updates to 7.0.1. Although it is not a problem for the 7.0.1 Windows Update service, it can be an issue for the Windows Update Agent, if you have one installed on your system. The Windows Update Agent checks to see if the registration key of your product is present on the Windows Update web site. If the registration key is not present, the Agent will not be able to verify whether the updates need to be installed. As we can see in the update log, the Windows Update Agent firmware build 3586.0 is required to verify the product. If you installed Windows Update on your PC before installing Windows 7, you will have this firmware in the Agent. However, if you have installed Windows Update after installing Windows 7, you will have this firmware in the 7.0.1 product. If you have just installed the 7.0.1 upgrade then the Agent should not have the firmware built in it. However, the upgrade tool may have built it in as part of the install process. If this is the case, there is nothing you can do but remove the Windows Update Agent from your PC. The uninstall process should be straightforward. However, if you have the Agent in your system but it does not appear to be working, I would suggest you uninstall it. However, if you have the Agent in your system and it does not appear to be working, this is a good indication that something else is wrong with your system. The following article has all the information that you need to clean up your system, if the Agent cannot verify that the product has the latest updates: This article has been archived and is no longer updated by Microsoft. Comments A very good explanation and very helpful. This was exactly what I was looking for. Also, another problem is that there is no version of Windows 7 for HP laptops at the moment. Oct 07, 2009 Andy I had the same problem. It required me to use my Windows 7 DVD and the Full Offline Windows Setup Wizard. Once in Windows 7, I uninstalled Windows Update, then re-installed it and that fixed my issue. 82157476af
